2.2 District Overview

Toledo was officially incorporated on October 10, 1892. Toledo was named by Celeste Rochon after a pioneer side wheel paddle steamer operated by Captain Oren Kellogg of the Kellogg Transportation Company. The boat traveled the Cowlitz River. A picture of the riverboat is hanging downtown next to the drugstore.

The first school in Toledo was called the OK School. It was a one room school house. Most of the children who lived out of the town limits had to ride a boat across the river to and from school until the bridge was built.

The current Middle School was originally the High School until the new High School was built in 1975. While the middle school was being remodeled in 1995, students were relocated for the year to St. Mary's Church and School.

The Cowlitz Indian Tribe made a special Totem Pole for Toledo High School. The town has always used the "Indian" as the School's mascot (of course after receiving permission from the tribe). Recently, a painting was donated to the High School of "Old Ike" who was the last full blooded Cowlitz Indian. His portrait still hangs within the halls of the High School.

The Toledo School District's mission statement is:

"Each child, each day, each classroom."

The district plans to resubmit a bond issue that failed to get approval in 2014 for a major remodel of the high school. No seismic retrofits have been completed for any district buildings and the district has no buildings with major historical significance.
